SHALOM

A Reform Congregation

Volume 18 Issue 4

A Letter from the President October 2024

Since Thursday, July 25, I have attended 11 webinars hosted by The Secure Community Network (SCN), the URJ (Union for Reform Judaism) and the ADL (Anti-Defamation League). These webinars brought together Jewish security professionals, national security experts, and religious leaders to offer advice and best practices to help congregations prepare for a safe High Holiday season.

Thanks to Temple Shalom's past president and current Safety Committee Chair, Cookie Brenner, we have had in-person training on many safety topics, from situational awareness to stop the bleed, over the last 3 years.

What changes have we made to create an environment where safety is a priority?

All guests must pre-register and provide identification.

Entry points are secure, and guests are welcomed at the door by designated trained members of the congregation.

Exits and entrances are clearly marked and unobstructed.

A first aid kit, Stop the Bleed® kit, an AED, and a wheelchair are located for easy access should it be necessary to use them.

At the beginning of each service, safety and emergency procedures are reviewed.

See Something, Say Something™ reporting information is on our website and on our wall.

What can our members and guests do to help implement a safe environment?

Actively cooperate with security directions, check-in procedures and other protocols.

Support the board and administration as they make decisions to create and implement an effective security plan.

Know where first aid kits, Stop the Bleed® kits, and AEDs are located and attend trainings on how to use them.

Be aware of what is going on around you and be prepared to report and assist when needed.

Always report incidents, suspicious activity, or other concerns to local law enforcement and the SCN Duty Desk at DutyDesk@securecommunitynetwork.org or 844.SCN.DESK.

Attend in-person trainings and practice safety procedures.

If someone would like to make security suggestions, contact Cookie Brenner.

Wishing you Shanah Tovah and a safe and healthy 5785. Looking forward to sharing the holidays with you,

Hope Sachwald, President

Much of Jewish religious observance is based on remembering the past.

In our personal lives, there are a host of rituals designed to help us remember our loved ones who have died. There is the Kaddish, there is Yahrzeit and there is the Yizkor service. We name our children and grandchildren after departed loved ones so they'll be remembered. We put the names of departed loved ones on memorial plaques and in Yom Kippur memorial booklets. We make donations to the temple and to various charitable organizations in memory of departed loved ones.

But for all the emphasis we place on the importance of remembering, we should also reflect on the importance of forgetting.

Important as is the power to remember, no less important is the power to forget.

If we had to live each day burdened with the weight of past griefs and bereavements, if we couldn't banish from our minds our past failures, our past fears and our past frustrations, then our lives would be very difficult to live.

So many families remain splintered and fragmented because of some real or imagined slight suffered many years ago which the offended party can't or won't forget.

Many a marriage could stand a healthy dose of forgetting. One man complained to a friend that whenever his wife gets angry, she becomes HISTORICAL. His friend tried to correct him and said, "Don't you mean HYSTERICAL rather than HISTORICAL?" "No," the husband said, "I mean HISTORICAL. She starts listing everything I did wrong in the last 27 years."

Lewis E. Lawes, who served for many years as warden of Sing Sing prison, once said that our prisons are filled with people who couldn't or wouldn't forget, people who had to get even with other people whom they felt had slighted them.

So many lives are shattered with all kinds of destructive memories. People carry so many resentments, hurts, sorrows and disappointments suffered in the arena of life. And they pay an exorbitant price for such remembering. These remembrances destroy their health. In Leviticus 19.18, the Torah commands us not to "bear a grudge." The Torah is really urging us for our own sake to use our God-given power to forget.

An anonymous poet put into rhyme some thoughts about forgetting that it would be worthwhile to remember.

*This world would be for us a happier place
And there would be less of regretting
If we would remember to practice with grace,
The very fine art of forgetting.*

During this High Holiday season, let us concentrate on forgetting past grievances and concentrate on how we can live our lives to have a brighter, more fulfilling future.

Mary and I wish you a fulfilling, healthy 5785.

Now, when you witness an act of hate, you can report it so that all three organizations can collaboratively respond, investigate, and track patterns of similar incidents around the state.
